The volumes in this series investigate, from critical theoretical and empirical perspectives, the prospects of global citizenship education and examine how globalization has affected and is affecting educational reform in K–12 and higher education systems worldwide. Global Citizenship Education is a form of civic learning that emphasizes the importance of action in learning and confronts issues of social justice and identity on a local, national, and global scale. It unites theory and practice and calls for active participation in projects that address global issues of a social, political, economic, or environmental nature.

Authors in this series investigate how globalization influence citizenship education, to what extent global citizenship education can be implemented in classrooms, and how global citizenship education interplays with the community at these levels. Starting with the everyday experiences and knowledge of participants in educational processes, the books in the series provide critical analysis of changing student demographics and behavior; administration and funding; pedagogy and curriculum; teacher perceptions and diversity; testing and accountability; and schools and democracy.

The first book in the series sets the groundwork theoretically. Among subsequent books, some are theorized collections of case studies in various regions including Latin America, North America, Europe, Africa, Asia, the Middle East, and Oceania, and others examine specific issues and topics related to the series theme. Offering research and insights that are widely applicable internationally, this series provides a deep understanding of how globalization is affecting teachers and students in 21st century classrooms.
